Hello, dear reader! I'm the author of the text you're reading. Not @ReconcyI, but the narrator. The character they're playing.

I have a suggestion for you. Go into this book's source code and find the part that generates this message. What's the probability it would appear? Go on, look. I can wait. It's in `main.rs`, line 268.

It's pretty low, isn't it? Do you think the one I submitted to the NaNoGenMo issue just happened to have it? Or do you think ReconcyI chose one that did on purpose?

This entire book could, in theory, have been generated by precisely the code I shared. But was it?

Are the section IDs I used really random? What about the four words? Or is there something else going on?

Have fun.

P.S. your lucky section numbers are #1480, #41579, #473, #15933, #52151, #41316, #11907, #27745, #27172, #4023, #15149, and #48739.

- nanogenmo - It's this programming event - maybe you've heard of it?
- programming - I'm doing it.
- maybe - Something or nothing.
- exception - It's supposed to mean something.
- random - See 'nature.'
- generated - See 'generation.'
- generation - It's happening.
- generates - See 'generation.'
- known - See 'know.'
- theory - See 'math.'
- issue - See my code for examples.
- code - You're why it exists.
- think - We all need to do it.
- look - You're doing it.
- probability - See 'math.'
- find - You've done it!
- suggestion - We all have them.
